Process The Hub We believe in designing products that are at the front end of the design process. Getting to know your branding and visual style guide throughout the product journey allows us to develop with you. Our creative process is bespoke to the client and their business objectives. We always start with high quality research and with a very clear understanding of the objectives. Kiosk Here at FitKit we develop solutions to challenges in a number of ways. Our first option is to create a prototype that we can show to our clients to help them understand how it can look and feel and what it will do. After a discussion with our client we continue into the next phase which is the mock up. A mock up allows our client to further understand the size and style of the product, as well as how it will work. Prototype We can continue into the prototype phase by creating a physical version that our client can touch and feel. This allows us to test the functionality and continue development. This is the platform where the final product is created and tested. Virtual Reality Creating a desktop or mobile product that can be tested in virtual reality is where we continue to test and create solutions. This provides a platform where your product can be fully immersed. Virtual reality allows your client to experience a product in a way that is not possible in any other way. The future of the digital industry is digital design and virtual reality allows that in the most immersive way. We will continue to progress the product until it meets your satisfaction. FitKit Design will work with you from concept through to production.1996 Asia-Pacific Rally Championship The 1996 Asia-Pacific Rally Championship was an auto racing championship held across Asia and Oceania. The championship was the 3rd APRC and was recognised by the FIA as the FIA Asia-Pacific Rally Championship. The championship was won by Henri Toivonen driving a Citroën Xantia. Calendar The championship was contested over five events. Points system Championship points were awarded to drivers based on the total of their scores from a driver's best four rounds in the season.
